SEMINAR

- Topic : "Bharatiya Sanskriti O Paribesh Chetana"
Organized by : Department of Sanskrit
Date & Time : 31.01.2019, 12 O' Clock
Speaker : Dr. Rakesh Das, Associate Professor, Department of Sanskrit
Ramakrishna Mission Vivekananda University, Belur Participants : 104 students & teachers. Along with students & teachers of neighboring Colleges.

AIM :

Environment issues forming part of every academic seminars and symposiums fails to bring out the eternal truth of tracing environmental consciousness as reflected in Indian culture.

In fact ancient Indian techniques of environment conservation can help us better manage our natural resources now.

To discuss about Man and Environment in India - Past Traditions and present challenges is the sole aim of this seminar.

Focusing on our roots of culture and lifestyle and moving forward on the path of development.

Speech :

Dr. Das analysed elaborately in a scientific manner how a huge corpus of ancient texts provide a moral guideline for environmental preservation and conservation. Abuse and exploitation of nature was considered as unjust. Plans to protect air and water, wilderness and wildlife are in fact plans to protect man. Management of land and water resources. The talk examined several traditional Indian practices for environmental conservation and their relevance and practicality in today's era of environmental degradation.

Outcome :

In the past few years, the threats to our environment have become exigent Natural calamities are occurring frequently global warming increasing rapidly threats to our environment have to environmental education especially in academic institutions.

But this thought provoking lecture today has harped on role of ancient texts to illuminate the students with an alternative option and integration with the community at large.
